Description:

Designed for Architects and other lighting professionals, this seminar will review strategic applications for interior lighting that can be used to maximize sustainability objectives for commercial spaces and qualify for LEED points.

Learning Objectives:

After the completion of this course, participants will be able to:

Understand specific LEED categories related to interior lighting and control strategies

Learn how interior lighting practices can have a large impact on LEED projects

Apply sustainable lighting strategies to meet progressive energy code requirements

Integrate innovative lighting and control technologies for sustainable environments

Teaching Methods:

The CES facilitator uses an in-depth PowerPoint presentation supplemented with examples and case studies to provide an overview of the LEED points system and how it pertains to lighting design.

A/V Needed:

Electrical power and a screen for the PowerPoint presentation. The CES facilitator supplies the laptop and necessary projectors.

Target Audience:

Architects, Interior Designers, Lighting Designers, Electrical Engineers, Building Owners and other lighting professionals specializing in commercial markets will find this program highly valuable. The audience can range in size from 5 to 30. Material is suitable for every experience level with time allowed at the conclusion of the presentation to address questions.

Facilitator Qualifications:

All pre-approved CES instructors have been fully trained on CES guidelines. In order to present this course to an audience, presenters must be trained by completing a Ledalite seminar as well as filling out a Presenter Quality Commitment Statement form.

Costs:

There is no cost to bring this program to your firm or chapter meeting.
